'The distinction between the past, present and future is only an illusion, however persistent.'

—Albert Einstein

These days, even respected physicists like Stephen Hawking are being forced to admit that time travel may be possible. But has it already happened? These people say it has.

5 - Christ's Personal Photographer

Father Pellegrino Ernetti was a Benedictine monk and respected authority on archaic music. He also claimed to have co-invented—as part of a team that included Nobel Prize-winning physicist Enrico Fermi and German rocket scientist Werner von Braun—the 'chronovisor,' a device that looked like a television but could tune in to events from the past.

According to Ernetti, he had observed the last supper and Christ's crucifixion, as well as Napoleon and Cicero. The team had later voluntarily dismantled the device, because in the wrong hands, it could create 'the most fearsome dictatorship the world has ever seen.' It had been inspired, he said, by Nostradamus—who had personally related to him the device's possibilities.

When pressed for evidence, Ernetti produced a picture of Christ on the cross reportedly photographed through the chronovisor. After the photo's resemblance to a carving by Cullot Valera was noticed, however, Ernetti was forced to admit the photo was a fake. Nevertheless, Ernetti insisted the chronovisor was real.

4 - The Pilot Who Entered A Parallel Dimension

In 1935, a wing commander with Britain's Royal Air Force named Sir Victor Goddard flew his open-cockpit biplane from Scotland to England on weekend leave. On the way, he passed over Drem Airfield near Edinburgh, which had been constructed during World War I. The tarmac and four hangars were in disrepair and barbed wire divided the field into numerous pastures filled 1927. Bielek claimed he later became director of mind control for the Montauk Project, whose members in the '80s travelled through a time vortex and changed the outcomes of various wars. When they returned to their own time, they would decide if they'd changed things for the better. If not, they would simply restore the status quo.

1 - Space Barbie

With her tiny waist, large breasts, and doll-like features, Valeria Lykhanova has been called a 'real-life Barbie.' She insists, however, that she is really an alien time-traveller come to Earth to save the world from superficiality. The Ukrainian-born Lukyanova—who says her spiritual name is Amatue—shot to Internet fame in 2012 with her 20-minute video 'Space Barbie', in which she said she is here to help move us 'from the role of the "human consumer" to the role of "human demi-god".'

Lykhanova said she started seeing spirits from 'other dimensions' when she was 12 or 13 and developed the ability to travel outside of her body to other planets and universes. She communicates with these otherworldly beings not verbally, but in 'the language of light'. While she has already published a book about her astral trips, Lukyanova's real goal is to become a pop star.

And the Grammy goes to Amatue for best performance in the language of light.
